III. Discussion of Speech-Language Pathology Assistant Training in California

- A. Update on New Training Programs
- B. On-line Speech-Language Pathology Assistant Training
- C. Clinical/Fieldwork Opportunities for Bachelor Degree Holders and Relevant Ethical/Professional Issues

Chairperson O'Connor opened the discussion regarding the issues surrounding training speech-language pathology assistants (SLPAs), both at the community college level and at the undergraduate level, in terms of offering coursework and clinical training to bachelor degree holders who are seeking registration as an SLPA in the state.

Chairperson O'Connor stated that all institutions involved or interested in training students to become SLPAs were invited to attend the Committee meeting to discuss the current challenges and opportunities in providing such training to California students and to students who wish to transfer to a California institution to complete a course of study in SLPA.

The participants outlined the following challenges facing both California institutions where SLPAs are trained and the impact SLPAs have on the profession of speech-language pathology:

- The vast number of bachelor students seeking registration as SLPAs may be saturating the field of speech-language pathology and may be displacing speech-language pathologists in certain employment settings where the paraprofessionals may be used as independent practitioners.
- There is a concern that there are not enough supervisors willing and/or appropriately trained to oversee the services of the growing number of registered SLPAs.
- There may be limited employment opportunities for registered SLPAs due to insurance reimbursement restrictions and the overall down-turn of the economy.
- There are limited field-work sites to provide clinical training to SLPA students. Community college programs and undergraduate programs are competing for field-work sites.
- There are ethical considerations for training programs to accept transfer students into the SLPA field work courses, as program personnel have no experience or knowledge of the student academic potential or interpersonal character.
- On-line SLPA programs operating in other states are seeking to place students in field-work placements in California by independently vetting the site field work contracts. Such on-line programs have not been reviewed and approved by the Board nor has there been a review of the coursework by an SLPA training program expert to determine whether the program offers an equivalent course of study to that offered by a California approved SLPA program.
- Employers of SLPAs are making hiring decisions based on degree merit, thus creating competition for jobs between associate level SLPAs and those who hold a bachelor's degree.
- The coursework offered in undergraduate speech-language pathology programs differs from that afforded to students in community college SLPA programs in that SLPA training programs instruct students on how to be competent support-level personnel, whereas undergraduate programs are designed to train students in independent practice.

Information was shared regarding the training programs, both undergraduate and at the community college SLPA campuses that currently offer clinical training to bachelor degree holders. These programs are as follows: San Jose State, San Joaquin Delta, San Francisco State, University of the Pacific, University of Redlands, California State Los Angeles, and Long Beach State.

Ms. Del Mugnaio closed and thanked those in attendance. She stated that the Board will examine the issues above to determine if any regulation changes or educational efforts should be considered.

Chairperson O'Connor adjourned the meeting at 4:58 p.m.
